I'm not a particularly free-range guy, but the idea of ordering via the net is getting more and more tempting to me. Sure, I like the convenience of shopping at a local store, but I really don't mind going online. Not only is there no fat, but there is also no fear of getting your order wrong. I mean, who wants to spend all of their money on something they're going to have to take back? Of course, as I say, I don't normally order things this way, and in fact, I usually eat out more. But it's definitely an interesting idea, especially since it lets me order items from sites like Amazon and even eBay (i.e. food). So here's my opinion on this new way of shopping. It's sure to cut the fat. It's based on the idea of doing all the shopping for you. It's also a great way for people with busy lives, because the whole shopping process can be done online. It's more secure. You have to enter your credit card information online, but you won't have to worry about someone else stealing the number. It's almost anonymous. I mean, most people don't want to enter their address into the site they're buying from. It's just far too open. It's also fairly anonymous, and most people really don't want to use their credit card number. It's more efficient. All you have to do is look online, find what you want, click on a link and then immediately be told how much the whole thing is going to cost. Of course, you may have to fill in your address again. That's the only real drawback. And that's about it. Does this sound like a good idea to you? Do you think it'
